Maria Martinez made her wonderful pots. By Robbie R This book seems to have been written for children. It is oversimplified and contains no new information about how Maria Martinez made her wonderful pots. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Not what I expected By Sarah Lee Proctor Only average but I guess you 'get what you pay for' but I really expected it to be more. Has very few pages. Sorry.

Maria Martinez is the renowned late potter of San Ildefonso Pueblo in New Mexico whose pots were often given by President Lyndon Johnson to visiting heads of state. This book tells, in simple terms and photographs, how she produced her famous polished blackware. Maria's pots are in museums and private collections all over the world. Hazel Hyde originally composed a picture story similar to the current book about Maria Martinez in 1930 for the students in her private school in New York City to teach them about pottery making among American Southwestern Indians.

"Retrace the steps it took for the most famous potter in the Southwest, Maria Martinez, to produce one of her prized pieces of black on black pottery. The history of Maria, her husband Julian, and son Popovi Da, is noted. The book is a tribute to this family, renowned for its contributions to classic pottery." --Ray E. Jenkins, P.M., Denver Westerners' Roundup
"Hazel Hyde originally composed her picture-story about Maria Martinez in 1930 for the students in her private school in New York City to teach them about pottery making among Southwestern Indians. The book is still pertinent because Maria is one of the famous Indian potters of all time and many of her creations are becoming collectors' items. Maria and her husband, Julian, work together, from clay to finished product." --Amigos
