The parts of this practical bookbinding guide have been so arranged as to correspond to our present-day division of work: preparatory work, forwarding, covering, and finishing. In England and France the various processes have for a long time been similarly termed, and although in Germany we could not follow their lead without any deviation, because our method of work and division of labour are so different, yet the basis of this arrangement has been used in this book.

About the Author Paul Adam was born in The United Kingdom January 01, 1958 in Coventry. He is an English writer of novels for both adults and younger readers. Adam moved to Sheffield before the age of one. He studied law at Nottingham University, then began a career in journalism, working both in England, in his childhood town of Sheffield, and Rome. Since then he has written 11 critically acclaimed thrillers for adults and the Max Cassidy series of thrillers for younger readers about a teenage escapist, the first of which, Escape from Shadow Island, won the Salford Children's Book Award. He has also written film and television scripts.
